About the Book

A collection of beautifully crafted and poignant poems

This assortment of stirring verses are primarily concerned with musings about the author's Christian faith—a faith which is less concerned with abstract doctrine than with living out the Gospel in every day living. Topics range from family life, human nature, politics and a variety of poignant situations. The verses are as challenging as ever, and they cover the poet's varied experience and encounters with a diversity of people. These poems shine a critical, but compassionate, light on contemporary people and events.

Author Henry Disney says in usual poetic fashion:

“At times I've had a close exchange with death,
But soon escaped to live again.
I've met a rich array of men
And women drawn from diverse walks
Of life, both high and low. With some I've clashed. With most I've relished each
As I've beheld the child behind
The mask. The only tale I'll tell
Is one of thanks for love for wife,
For children too, for theirs as well.”
